Malleability of moral behavior

Armin Falk

I am going to present ongoing work showing that moral behavior is malleable, depending on context, institutions and emotions. In my experiments I study the role of competing sources of self-image, the role of status induced feelings of envy and scorn, insensitivity to numbers and effects of diffusion of responsibility. I will also briefly talk about the role of individual characteristics in shaping moral behavior.